Glycanase 2 (α -N-acetylgalactosaminidase) is activated by the SUMO2/3 modification and SNX9. A new scheme of glycan recognition has recently been proposed, where a glycan may act as both ligand and activator. Here we show that the amino acid sequence Glycanase 2 (GalNAc-2- α -sialyltransferase) is activated by a SUMO2/3 and SNX9 modification, which is conserved in the Golgi apparatus. Ablation of metastatic osteosarcoma: case report and review of the literature. Bone and soft tissue sarcomas represent approximately 1% of all adult malignancies. Metastatic disease to the bone with a distant sarcoma occurs in 5% to 15% of all adult solid tumors. A wide variety of sarcomas have been described in this setting, and some authors have reported a high mortality associated with them. Bisphosphonates are commonly used in the treatment of metastatic disease as they inhibit bone resorption and can potentially be used as a local delivery agent for therapeutic activity. We describe a patient with a large osteosarcoma of the proximal fibula in a metastatic context that was treated successfully using local delivery of doxorubicin combined with alendronate and zoledronic acid. This article is a review of the literature regarding bisphosphonates and osteosarcoma as well as our own experience in this setting. [Process analysis of the control of acoustic signals in a device for the detection and identification of heart sounds]. To control the transmission of acoustic signals, a signal analysis system was developed which controls the frequency and amplitude of the sound signal. This system was based on a computer equipped with a sound card. An algorithm for the recognition of heart sounds was integrated into the system. Four techniques were developed to identify and control the acoustic signals: The first two techniques analyzed the time and frequency characteristics of the sound signal. The final two techniques used a threshold comparison procedure which analyzed
