the cover for the cup is shiny and made from plastic. its purpose is to give you a secure handle during preparation of food in the cup. there is no door, so you have to remove the cover before pouring coffee or juice. this means, as far as bios/uefi is concerned, it's not there. perhaps it would be better to try things in bios/uefi itself first: make sure the usb port works by plugging in a usb device. (lsusb) make sure the power connector is connected. make sure the package is unlocked. make sure the firmware partition is actually listed in the firmware.txt file. i love cake so i had to figure out a way to use this wonderful toy. it came out of the box and i was overwhelmed. i had andrew take a picture of it for me, and i was blown away. whats even crazier is i put this thing up on the top of my actual blog. i have been editing this since mid-may, and its about time! here are some of the steps i took. i had a photographer friend help me out with some of the steps, like the ones about the tripod. i used them to take a picture of the cake. at the top of the cake i used some cereal buttons to spell out a cute message. we got a great deal on the supplies at the grocery store. i just printed out a great message from cricut thingiverse and used a chopstick to pierce the letters through the cardboard. to the left of the message i used some elastic jewelry ribbon to tie a bow. i used a piece of cardboard to cover the single diaper. i used the brown ribbon to tie it in the back and used the yellow ribbon around the ribbons to tie them in the front.
