The wreck of HMS Edinburgh, a Second World War vintage Type-15 Tribal class cruiser of the Royal Navy (RN), lies wrecked in the Indian Ocean off the coast of Mauritius. HMS Edinburgh was a Tribal-class cruiser and one of four Tribal-class ships built for the Royal Navy (RN) during the late 1930s. She was the first Royal Navy warship to use the Green Star torpedo, and the first RN warship to use a combination of C-/D-grade torpedoes (aside from the cruiser HMS Devonshire). Edinburgh was deployed to the Mediterranean Sea in October 1940. During her first engagement at Taranto, her gunnery officer, Sub-Lieutenant William Wiltshire fired the first salvo of the war at the German battleship Tirpitz. Edinburgh continued to serve in the Mediterranean until being sent to the Indian Ocean. Sinking Edinburgh left the Mediterranean on 23 December 1940, and the port of Durban was her last stop before heading to the Indian Ocean. The night of her arrival in Durban, Edinburgh put into port at the request of the South African Navy to assist in the evacuation of the Portuguese merchant sailors and Royal Navy sailors and soldiers from the siege of the port of Mormugao, Goa. The evacuation took place on Christmas Day
