Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an optical communication apparatus which transmits and receives optical signals. 2. Description of the Related Art As a clock signal being a reference signal of an optical communication apparatus is transmitted through an optical fiber, if the clock signal is attenuated by a loss of the optical fiber, a clock of a receiver side which receives the clock signal is deviated from the original clock, thereby the receiver fails to acquire an accurate clock. To prevent an inconvenience caused by the above, there is known a method of reducing the clock amplitude by about a half in a transmitter side to transmit the clock signal through the optical fiber, and increasing the clock amplitude at a receiver side to receive the clock signal, thereby to make the clock amplitude in the optical fiber about the half of that in a free space (Non-patent
