TPG Sheets give product designers and product partners versatile color representation for communication, specification, and evaluation. UPC 849572026069 So based on your opinions the top 5 recommended sheets were (and not in any specific order), Costco Kirkland Cotton Sheets, Costco Charisma Cotton Sheets, Target Threshold Performance Cotton Sheets, Cariloha Bamboo Sheets, & Amazon Mellanni Microfiber Sheets. First is Target Threshold Performance 400 thread count sateen cotton sheets. They are minimal to moderate in the wrinkle department depending on how long they are left in the dryer ;). With each wash they soften up, as you would expect from a cotton, but hold up well. These sheets could be pressed to give that clean look. A set comes with 2 pillow cases, a flat and a fitted. 2 elastics and a deep pocket keep these sheets in place on your mattress. Frequently target has 25-30% off bedding sales which makes these a great deal for the price. They come in a wide variety of patterns which is unlike any of the other 4 sheets, as well as a wide variety of solid colors. Costco Kirkland 680 Pima Cotton Sheets. These sheets were highly recommended and I see why. They were the only king set to come with 4 pillow cases, they are thicker without feeling hot or heavy. Their version of white comes across more as a soft white instead of a stark white. They can be pressed and have the added detail on the edge of the pillow case which elevates them above the bamboo and microfiber sheets. If I directly compare them to the Target Performance sheets I would say they are very very similar, but a little softer and less silky. To me, they are the definition of cotton sheets. Do not feel hot, but instead keep my legs feeling cool. Downfall is you have to be a Costco member to purchase these sheets, and they are more expensive than the Target Performance. They also are limited in their color options at 4 different colors and no patterns. You know how things around the house all seem to fall apart at the same time? I think it's due to the time since you moved in, got housewarming/wedding/shower presents, had milestones that caused purchases, but it is annoying how suddenly one weekend you need to replace all the things. Both my husband and I realized when drying off with different torn and threadbare towels that it was time to upgrade the contents of our linen closet, starting with towels. It had been a while since we had bought towels and bath sheets, let alone any we liked. I was on the hunt for the best bath sheet and who makes the best bath sheet. I've used a lot of different towels and bath sheets over the years, many of which have been recommended to me by people I trust and respect. But that doesn't mean they want the same thing out of a towel. This is what I am looking for: Asking about the best bath sheets or towels is one of the most popular questions in most of the Facebook groups I'm in and subreddits I read. And the bath sheets most recommended are from Costco. Yay, Costco has great prices. Boo, I don't have a Costco membership. However, I found this article on the Mayfair Hotel Supply website that compares Egyptian cotton to HygroCotton and it made me feel that HygroCotton is quite a superior yarn for towels if you like them fluffy as well as absorbent. I decided to order a set of two of the Supima HygroCotton bath sheets from Costco. The price for the duo was $32.99 which was cheaper than buying two Threshold brand bath sheets at Target. The color selection for the Charisma HygroCotton bath sheets is pretty meh. Pale blue, pale gray, sage green, ivory, and white. While I am more a fan of orange, fuschia, and cobalt, I went with the set of two bath sheets in pale blue. Our towels are washed with Tide detergent, no fabric softener, no dryer sheets. The Charisma towels came out of the dryer and appeared to be thicker than before, still soft but not with that silky finish. I had just finished a Peloton ride so I grabbed one and headed to the shower. I barely had to brush my skin with the towel; this bath sheet was soaking up water like it was auditioning for a Bounty paper towels ad. I was floored. I had bought fancy towels before but never experienced such absorption. And it seemed with the first few washes, each time the towels got loftier and more absorbent without losing their softness. We have now washed and dried these towels a dozen times and believe that they are the best bath sheets on the market. And it's nice that they are also cheaper than many other brands that claim they make the best bath sheets. Here is one of my year-old Charisma bath sheets from Costco. We don't baby our towels; we wash with Tide, throw in the dryer sometimes, line dry sometimes (with a quick tumble after to get rid of pollen). You can see the binding and hems are still intact, the terry loops still looking great. There is one thread hanging off a hem, but nothing that dramatic. Our Charisma bath sheets look like the newest towels in our linen closet, even though they are the most used and not the newest. Costco items are generally cheaper in-store than online, so I suggest dropping by a store. Also, a few times each year, Costco offers several dollars off the Charisma towels, but I am not sure about the bath sheets. I have used both the Charisma and the Lands End supima and give a slight edge to the LE, but one must wait until a 50% off everything with free shipping offer. There should be one in the next few weeks. I would really appreciate if you could do an article on bed sheets. My favorite sheets were bamboo, because they are usable year round, cool in summer, warm in winter. The first set of sheets lasted a couple years, but other sets barely make it 9 months, before they tear, shred or pill up. I have not been able to find any good quality bamboo -or cotton sheets, and would love some guidance.
