Kingdom of Heaven is a movie that will take you back to the time of the Crusades and show you the glory and tragedy of war, faith and love. It is a movie that will make you think about the meaning of life, death and destiny. It is a movie that will inspire you to be brave, noble and compassionate. It is a movie that you should not miss. In this article, we will explore some of the main themes and characters of Kingdom of Heaven and how they relate to the historical context of the Crusades. We will also discuss some of the differences between the theatrical version and the director's cut version of the movie and how they affect the overall story and message of the movie.

Themes and Characters of Kingdom of Heaven

One of the main themes of Kingdom of Heaven is the conflict between religion and politics in the Middle East. The movie shows how different factions of Christians and Muslims fight for control over Jerusalem, the holy city for both faiths. The movie also shows how some people use religion as a justification for violence and oppression, while others use it as a source of peace and tolerance. The movie portrays both sides of the conflict as complex and human, with good and bad qualities. Another theme of Kingdom of Heaven is the personal journey of Balian, the protagonist of the movie. Balian starts as a simple blacksmith who loses his wife and child and has no purpose in life. He then meets his father, Godfrey, who reveals that he is a knight and invites him to join him in Jerusalem. Balian accepts and travels to the Holy Land, where he learns about knighthood, honor and courage. He also falls in love with Sibylla, the princess of Jerusalem, who is married to Guy de Lusignan, a cruel and ambitious nobleman. Balian becomes a leader and a defender of Jerusalem against Saladin's army, but he also faces moral dilemmas and challenges along the way. Some of the other important characters of Kingdom of Heaven are:

- Saladin: The sultan of Egypt and Syria and the leader of the Muslim army. He is a wise and noble ruler who respects his enemies and seeks peace with them. He is also a skilled warrior who commands a large and loyal army.
- Sibylla: The princess of Jerusalem and the sister of King Baldwin IV. She is a beautiful and compassionate woman who loves Balian and wants to rule Jerusalem with him. She is also conflicted between her duty to her husband and her brother and her desire for freedom and happiness.
- King Baldwin IV: The king of Jerusalem and the leper. He is a young and frail man who suffers from leprosy, but he is also a wise and just ruler who maintains a fragile peace between Christians and Muslims. He is aware of his impending death and tries to secure a successor who can continue his legacy.
- Tiberias: The marshal of Jerusalem and a loyal friend of King Baldwin IV. He is an experienced and honorable knight who advises Balian and supports him in his decisions. He is also wary of Guy de Lusignan's schemes and tries to prevent a war with Saladin.
- Guy de Lusignan: The husband of Sibylla and the leader of the Templars. He is a greedy and ruthless man who wants to become king of Jerusalem by any means necessary. He is also a fanatic who hates Muslims and provokes them into war.
- Hospitaler: A knight and a priest who accompanies Balian to Jerusalem. He is a mentor and a friend to Balian who teaches him about faith, forgiveness and free will. He is also a brave fighter who dies defending Jerusalem.

Differences between Theatrical Version and Director's Cut Version

The theatrical version of Kingdom of Heaven runs for 144 minutes and was edited by Dody Dorn to fit the studio's requirements. The director's cut version runs for 194 minutes and was edited by Ridley Scott himself to restore his original vision for the movie. The director's cut version adds more scenes and characters that were cut from the theatrical version, such as:

- Balian's backstory: The director's cut version shows more details about Balian's life before he meets Godfrey, such as his relationship with his wife, his occupation as a blacksmith, his encounter with a priest who tries to take his wife's cross necklace, his killing of the priest in self-defense, his arrest by Godfrey's men, his escape from prison with Godfrey's help, his meeting with his half-brother Baldwin (who later becomes King Baldwin V), his inheritance of Godfrey's lands in Ibelin, etc.
- Sibylla's son: The director's cut version introduces Sibylla's son Baldwin (named after her brother), who is heir to the throne of Jerusalem. He is a young boy
